

Reflexive Verbs

Reflexive verbs have no real equivalent in English. The closest English comparison would be verbs with ‘self’ or ‘selves’, like ‘He helped himself’. Even in these cases, it doesn’t always work exactly the same way as in English.

I. Construction

To construct these verbs, we have to use the subject (e.g. ‘je’), a reflexive pronoun and the correct conjugation of the verb. We will take the example of ‘se réveiller’ (to wake (one’s self) up).

Subject	Reflexive Pronoun	Conjugated Verb
Je	Me	Reveille
Tu	Te	Reveilles
Il/Elle/On	Se	Reveille
Nous	Nous	Reveillons
Vous	Vous	Reveillez
Ils/Elles	Se	Reveillent

The verb endings, coloured red, are the same as the regular ‘-er’ verbs in the present tense.

The table below shows examples of the different types of verb endings as reflexive verbs:

'-ER' – Se lever (to get up)	'-IR' – Se sentir (to feel)	'-RE' – S'entendre avec (to get along with)
Je me lève	Je me sens	Je m'entends
Tu te lèves	Tu te sens	Tu t'entends
Il/Elle/On se lève	Il/Elle/On se sent	Il/Elle/On s'entend
Nous nous levons	Nous nous sentons	Nous nous entendons
Vous vous levez	Vous vous sentez	Vous vous entendez
Ils/Elles se lèvent	Ils/Elles se sentent	Ils/Elles s'entendent

As you can see, the verb endings follow the same patterns as verbs in the present tense. If the verb is regular in the present tense, it will remain regular as a reflexive verb. If it is irregular in the present tense, it will remain irregular as a reflexive verb too.

However, notice that the verbs beginning with a vowel make the reflexive pronouns take an apostrophe (m',t',s') instead of remaining 'me', 'te', and 'se'. The reflexive pronouns 'nous' and 'vous' don't change.

II. How do I know if a verb is reflexive?

Reflexive verbs in the dictionary will have 'se' or 's' in front of them. One of the reflexive verbs you should easily recognise is 's'appeler'. 'Je m'appelle...' literally means 'I call myself...'

III. Other Uses of Reflexive Verbs:

1. Reciprocal Verbs - Conveying Reciprocity

Using reflexive verbs is another way of conveying the meaning of 'each other'.

Example: 'Ils s'adorent' can mean 'They adore each other' as well as 'They adore themselves'.

2. Equivalent to the Passive in English

Reflexive verbs can also be equivalent to our passive tense in English ('be' + past participle).

Example: 'Le café se boit chaud' can mean 'Coffee is drunk hot'.

3. Idiomatic Pronominal Verbs - Reflexive Verbs without Explanation

Some reflexive verbs are just reflexive and don't exist without the reflexive pronoun.

Here are a few examples:

- Se souvenir de (to remember)
- Se plaindre (to complain)
- Se marier (to get married)

IV. How to Use Reflexive Verbs in the Negative

When we want to change reflexive verbs to form negative sentences, we put the 'ne' before the reflexive pronoun and the 'pas' after the conjugated verb.

Example:

- Je ne me souviens pas de la fête (I don't remember the party).
- Tu ne t'entends pas bien avec ma sœur (You don't get on well with my sister).
